neel upon a Mr. Armstrong, whose name appeared the visitors' book at the institution. but M

St. take no notice of the messages that had been sent to him to attend; had made inquiries in reference to Mrs. M. Cohen, Miss A. Cohen, and Miss Cohen, whose names appeared in the visitors' book; Mrs. Cohen was at Maitland; had seen Miss Cohen, who identified Mrs. Cohen's signature in the visitors' book; Miss Cohen told him that her uncle, Dr. H. L. W. Levey, had told her not to attend the Court, and upon any pretence whatever, and that he would accept the responsibility of her refusal to attend; witness saw a postcard note to that effect; J. P. Gibbs, who arrived at the Court visited the institution in 1881, had also been subpoenaed there were some other names in the visitors' book. A witness had not been able to find the people: Mrs. Smith, Summer Hill, the aunt of the boy Rollo Purkie, was unable to attend in consequence of illness.

The boy Cannon was recalled, and in answer to a question from his Honor said he had been asked some questions by Mr. Lyne and Mr. Maxted on the occasion of their visit. This concluded the evidence for the plaintiff.

Samuel Cook, examined by Mr. Dalley, deposed that he was a member of the editorial staff of the Sydney Morning Herald; he had been connected with that journal for 21 years; he knew Mrs. Anderson, the wife of plaintiff, the only way in which he had any knowledge of her was from seeing her at his office from time to time. He saw her there was about the middle of April 1880; he then told him that she and his husband had entered upon a benevolent enterprise for the instruction and maintenance of poor children; that he would be glad if the paper would direct attention thereto; and he proceeded to give some particulars when witness said he would very much prefer receiving the information from her husband; he told her they should be very glad to aid a benevolent object, and his desire was it possible to help them, but first of all he wished know precisely what it was; an arrangement was made for her husband to call on a subsequent day; witness thought the day fixed was the 26th of the month; he made a special appointment with one of the reporters to meet Mr. Anderson on that day, and to have long conversation with him, and ascertain precisely the objects of the institution; that appointment was kept by Mr. Anderson; he first of all called in witness, who introduced him to the reporter, and left them to get together; on the 27th of April an article appeared in the Sydney Morning Herald in reference to the charity; witness saw it in manuscript before it appeared.

Mr. Anderson, he was not the result of the interview with Mr. Anderson; he was not present at the interview with Mr. Anderson on the 26th and saw the witness on the 26th and the 27th. On the 26th and the 27th and the next day the article appeared; it was part of the witness's duty to direct the reporters in the performance of their duty in connection with the service; he had at that time no information about the institution other than what was supplied by Mr. Anderson; he did not remember what was the date of Mr. Anderson's first call at the Sydney Morning Herald Office after the appearance of the article; he remembered that she did come once or twice between that time and October in the same year, when a deputation waited upon Sir John Robertson in regard to some land; Mrs. Anderson had only one objection to the article.

on every visit that she made, that was to take the paper to help her—or help them, as she put it—by saying something in favour of the undertaking. On the second or third visit she was very important. A witness told her that he had some doubt as to whether the paper ought to say much about the institution, because it seemed to him that it was not under proper control; he pointed out on one occasion that there was no one to supervise the expenditure and take the general superintendence of the institution except themselves, and that, in fact, there was no guarantee that the money would be taught the right way. She then professed they could be taught in the institute which he was describing, almost certainly in the inspected the institution; at last on one occasion she mentioned the names of several persons who had been identified with the charity; that was towards the close of 1880, because witness remembered that in 1881 he did send a reporter—on the 26th February; he was told by Mrs. Anderson that something special was to take place on that day, but he could not remember distinctly what it was; she told him steamer would start from the Circular Quay which the reporter could go by, and that a number of persons were going; she mentioned the name of Sir Alfred Stephenson amongst others; in consequence of that representation he sent a member of the reporting staff, Mr. Harcus, possessing any report in the paper on the following publication day he requested Mr. Harcus to give an explanation; he told witness that he went aboard the steamer—

His HONOR: Where is Mr. Harcus with the Harriet? he is in Sydney.

Witness: He is not now coming, and there was a considerable number of persons on board; that they went to the Middle Harbour, and returned, without being

He said they were not able to land because the steamer could not get sufficiently near, to put them off the shore, and there were no boats to take them off the steamer; witness saw Mr. Anderson shortly afterwards; he told her that he had endeavored to get the report notwithstanding the fact that the steamer had not reached the place; he asked the reporter to call on Sir Alfred Stephen and request him to say what transpired on the day; he went there, but Sir Alfred was not at home, so he did not get the information; he asked witness whether he should persevere; witness said, no, he thought it had done all that could be expected of them, between the time and October, 1882, he saw Mrs. Anderson at his office frequently; she came a month or two after that, and at the request witness again sent a reporter, she said that she and Alfred Steffen and some other gentlemen were about to visit the Middle Harbour Institution, witness could not remember the date, nor could he remember the gentleman who went, but he remembered the circumstance very well because the reporter came to the office and said that he had seen Sir Alfred Steffen on board the steamer, but was told that it was a private party, and that he had returned; after this witness saw Mrs. Anderson two or three times, on each of these occasions he remembered two indications that a reporter

By Mr. Dalry: Witness said Mr. Linn was an experienced member of the staff, and had been on it for a number of years; he was one of the Parliamentary corps and a very experienced, intelligent, and careful reporter; he had been specially employed in visiting and reporting at public institutions when he was not engaged at Parliament a few days before the date on which Mr. Linn went, witness received a visit from Mr. Maxted, boarding-school officer in connection with the Children's State Relief

partment; he had a communication with witness about the "artisans' college"; witness did not think that he expressed a desire to accompany the reporter; in the course of the conversation witness said a reporter from the "States" was about to visit the institution, and he did not see any objection to Mr. Marted taking advantage of the same opportunity; he mentioned Mr. Lyne's name as one of the persons when Mrs. Anderson applied to witness to be expressed; he desired to know from the reporter would be sent, and expressed a desire to send a key to some of his friends from the North Shore to the establishment; witness thanked her for the offer, and said that they preferred to make their own arrangements; Mrs. Anderson then brought the report on the institution.

Q. Cross-examined by Mr. Owen: Witness did not know positively before the reporter went that Mr. Maxted, the Government officer, was going with him; he said he did not think there would be any objection to it, that if Mr. Lyne had no objection witness had none.

A. His Honor: Did Mr. Maxted express a squeamishness that suggestion?

Witness: He said he thought he would avail himself of it.

By Mr. Owen: He told Mr. Maxted that Mr. Lyne was the reporter he was going to send; this was about a week or five days before the reporter went; five days or a week before.

they went up Mr. Maxted knew the name of the top of the hill and knew that he might go up with him; witness also knew the views Mr. Maxted entertained with respect to the establishment; he thought that interview with Mr. Maxted was the first occasion on which he had seen him; that interview he found out Mr. Maxted had no doubts as to the society or otherwise; that were likely to be conferred on him by the institution, in fact he found out that Mr. Maxted doubted whether it was founded on a proper basis or was conducted as a institution ought to be; he felt certain that Mr. Maxted did not mention any doubts he had about Mr. Anderson or Mrs. Anderson; he did not think there anything personal in their conversation at all; witness understood the system under which Mr. Maxted was carrying out his work in the Government office; he believed that institution was managed on an entirely different principle than on which the Government were treating destitute children; there was nothing said by Mr. Maxted as to the treatment of the boys, as to whether they were properly and kindly treated or not; the instructions which were given to Mr. Lyne were to get the North Shore, take a carriage or cab, go to the college and give a full, particular, and faithful account of it; he does not remember telling him anything else; he did not desire to say anything more than what he was asked to report.

Mr. Owen: Did you draw his attention to any particular Witness: I don't think so.
 Mr. Owen: Try and recollect, Mr. Cook, I want to get all the information you can give me.
 Witness: I am desirous of giving you every information I do not remember that I gave him any instructions except that his examination was to be thorough.
 Mr. Owen: Did you tell him he was to make any particular inquiries of any individual—of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson of the house of the teachers, or anything of the Witness: No; he is an experienced man, he would know what I meant when I told him to make a full, faithful searching inquiry into the place.

His Honor: It was merely in these general terms, you did not say to see whether the boys were cleanly or well kept or whether they were sober people—you did not specify any of these things?

Witness: No.

Mr. Owen: You are quite sure of that?

Witness: Yes.

Mr. Owen: But you know that Mr. Lyons was going to or probably would go up, with Mr. Martin, who had come to you of the establishment, and had said he thought it was not on the right basis?

Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Owen: On each occasion when Mrs. Anderson came to witness, about sending up a register she gave exports. We, as manufacturers, cannot recognise too clearly that our prosperity is determined, to a very large degree, by that of our farmer class. Not only as important purchasers in every market do they appear, but it is the carrying of their products that profitably sustains our great railway system, with the dependent milling and mining interests." The tillage of the soil is in America the great base of the pyramid on which all the sloping superstructure rests, and the export of wheat is the great element of

of the foreign commerce for all the northern half of the Union. There are important exports of pork, and fresh, salted, and tinned meat, which are important in themselves, and which rest on the agricultural industry, but still wheat is the great staple export of the north. The price of wheat and the market for it is therefore a matter of great importance to the western farmers. The market is in Europe, and principally in England, and as England favours no one country more than another, the price depends on the competition of the wheat-producers all over the world. Some comes from the Baltic, some from Southern Russia, some from different parts of the Mediterranean, and some from Australia; but the United States has been the great provider for England, and has gone ahead of all its rivals. It has owed this supremacy to a very great extent to the rapid expansion of its railroad system. Without that it could have done very little. Dowered as that country is with magnificent rivers like the Mississippi and the St. Lawrence, waterway civilization and the St. Lawrence, water navigation alone would never have enabled it to send away its present wheat crop, for much of it is grown too far from those rivers to pay the carriage thither. But the enormous multiplication of railroads has admitted of the wheat crop being taken to the water side with the

Some of the rivals of America, however, though outstripped by her in the race, are slowly fetching up. Even Russia, which is a backward country, is every year sending more wheat to the port of Odessa: while India, which enjoys a much more vigorous railway administration, has been bringing its wheat-growing districts more and more within easy reach of shipping places. Mr. BOOKWALTER, while travelling in India, became deeply impressed with this fact, and he reminds his readers that they have had a run of good luck such as they can hardly expect again for years. He points to the fact that for a period of seven or eight years preceding 1881, there was an almost continuous failure of crops in Western Europe, especially in England and France, involving an enormous loss to the cultivators in those countries. Europe's loss was America's gain, for "during the same time our farmers were never blessed with such bounteous crops. This enabled them to pour their vast surplusage into the depleted markets of Europe at most remunerative prices. Having produced these 'bumper' crops at a time when they purchased their supplies at panic rates, it left to them that magnificent total of net profits that enabled them to throw off the burden of debt under which

Europe is, with better seasons, recovering its own position as a producer, India has, during the last ten years, come into the market to such an extent that she could almost have half supplied the wants of England last year.

Mr. BOOKWALTER reports as to the results of his observations and enquiries, that the climate and soil of India are quite as well suited to the growth of wheat as those of the United States, and that there are millions of acres yet uncultivated that could be given to this use. The average wet temp. in India is this crop. The average output in India is indeed only about eleven bushels per acre, as against sixteen in the United States. But then the Indian farmer works for himself, and lives cheaply, and can produce wheat more cheaply than it is produced in the United States. All that he wants is cheap carriage of his produce to the sea-coast. Under the stimulus of the English demand, and in virtue of the expenditure of English capital in Indian railways, India now stands second to the United States as a wheat supplier to England. To a certain extent, therefore, there is a race between the two countries, and the American farmer is competing with the Indian ryot. American laws may keep the Chinese out of the States, and so prevent the yellow race from competing on American soil with its domestic industries; but nevertheless is its great agricultural industry in competition with a similar industry carried on by a dark-skinned race, and no domestic legislation can prevent this. The Asiatic may be prohibited from showing his face in the United States, but none the less does he show his product in the British market, and the buyer in Mark-lane handles with calm impartiality the parcels from Chicago and those from Calcutta.

The fishermen's deputation that waited up on the COLONIAL SECRETARY on Friday vented a new grievance. Their fishing grounds in Port Jackson westward of Bradley's Head and Point Piper have been closed by proclamation, and thereby, it is alleged, twenty fishermen have been thrown out of employ. Thus their late trouble in regard to their nets, and the liability of those nets to con-fishery without appeal or redress, has no sooner been removed by the legislation of the last general session of Parliament, than an edict goes forth prohibiting them from using nets for the next few months. Not only are the grounds of the western portions of Port Jackson closed, but several of the estuaries and rivers north and south of this port are also closed, and for the present the occupation of some, at least, of our fishermen has gone. There are two or three aspects of the case, however, which are worth considering. Under the Act of 1881 a Fisheries Commission was appointed and constituted a body corporate, to regulate the fisheries of the colony, and preserve from exhaustion the natural supplies of marine and other edible fishes. The Commissioners were invested with almost plenary powers, and it is in pursuance of these powers that they have lately advised the closing of certain fishing grounds. They were chosen on account of their special knowledge of pisciculture and as men of standing in the community. Many disagreeable things have been said of them by fishermen; but in regard to the present closing of the fishing grounds, it has not even been hinted that they were actuated by any but the most unselfish and public spirited motives, or that they were influenced by any feeling of antagonism towards the fishermen. Mr. STUART, having consented to receive the deputation and listened to them, promised to obtain from the Commissioners the reason why they set him in motion to advise the issue of a proclamation by his EXCELLENCY for the closing of certain fishing grounds, now complained of. It is worth while to remember that Mr. STUART did not act upon the Commissioners' recommendation until it had been referred back to them and they had returned it endorsed as urgent. But as the fishermen are practically under the authority of the Commissioners, why were the latter not interviewed in the first instance, from the ship and the fire. The weather during the storm lashed had a very gloomy and threatening appearance, and the barometer gradually fell until it reached 29.00. Amongst other minor damages done, the mainmast topmast was carried away, and the flag of the United States was blown to shreds. The rigging of the vessel was wrecked, and had to be lashed up again. After noon, moderate southerly, southeasterly, and westerly winds were experienced up to five, where the vessel lay to. A full accident happened on the 29th of May, whilst the barque was in lat. 50° 30' N. and long. 10° 30' W. An African named Johannan was engaged on the deck, and was killed by the fall of a barrel, which fell overboard by the rail. The ship was brought round, and immediately steamed away, and the vessel was not seen again. It was without a single trace of him being discovered. The barque was not seen again until it was sighted in the harbor, which was the 31st of May. The vessel was then taken up, and the barque then proceeded on her voyage.
